

SHOKO YOSHINAKA

No matter how much the oceans and mountains erode, the human population increases, trash accumulates, or pollution skyrockets, the mass of the earth never seems to be affected by any of it.

Today, and day after day, people struggle in the face of materialism, worned that their worth and values will stay the same in much the same way. Either way, the one thing all of human-kind shares is their unwillingness to be eaten alive by their day-to-day lives. In that respect, we're pretty miniscule.
